?? An estimated haplogroup: the haplotype was extracted from <http://ISMGF.org> database

This Haplogroup prediction is unknown- this may be part of a newly found branch of the I group

 These results extracted from www.ysearch.org database

+ DYS388b = DYS389i - DYS389ii

A072 This is YGGAA1807

S The values of CDYs and CDYb have been reversed to clearly show the proper number of mutations.

5 Y-TAGA H4 from Relative Genetics is NOT counted the same way as Y-GATA from FTDNA. Subtract one from the RG or DNAHeritage value to compare.

463 The values in the table have been adjusted to report the same as FTDNA.

X Reported in with the NIST convention. Which is DNAH+2

Missing Data from the DNA test.

404 nomenclature is POST the May 2003 change

Markers with names in red background may mutate slightly faster (0.008 vs average 0.0025)

Markers with names with a Green background may mutate slightly slower (0.001 vs average 0.0025)

Color code for haplogroups other than R1b: Green is modal, Yellow one step from modal, Blue two steps....

The lines that have more green values are closer to the modal value for that haplogroup.

Results as posted are from three companies, thus there are some blank cells in the table because there are no results for that allele from the test.

The numbers in the bottom part of the R1b section give the allele values for R1b haplotype in the order of most likely to least likely.

For example DYS385a has a most likely value of 11 for R1b (and most of the Adams men had 11) and a second most likely value of 12 and it is in orange.

Orange indicates that this value occurs in 1% to 10% of the R1b haplotypes.

DYS439 and the NULL value can now be tested

In October 2012 Family Tree DNA explained that a change in which lab processed the sample results in different results for DYS439

It looks like the changed happened about kit number 232000 in April 2012

FTDNA wrote to Jane Murlishaw Lindsey

"The L1 SNP causes a null DYS439 readout because the SNP occurs in the sequence that the test is looking at in order to locate and read the marker.

If the SNP is present, the test does not find that sequence and a null value is reported. That is the case if the test is designed to locate DYS439 by that portion of the sequence; however, the test can be redesigned to look for a slightly different sequence, not including L1, so that it will find the DYS439 result regardless."

"Family Tree DNA has had a longstanding partnership with the University of Arizona, which has been a testing partner with FTDNA for nearly 12 years.

However, this partnership has recently come to a close, as we have decided to move all of our testing into our in-house lab. The University of Arizona's (UA) test does NOT adjust for L1, so someone who is L1+ may receive a null value for DYS439."

"Family Tree DNA's in-house lab, called the GRC, DOES adjust for L1, and will obtain a result for the marker regardless of the state of L1."

Second note Dated October 31, 2012

Hello Mr. Lyttle,

I wanted to reach out to you and let you know that we have been discussing the process of updating the NULL values on 439. We will not be assuming that all the NULL values will be a 12, however, we do expect about 96% of them to be. The other 4% will be either an 11 or 13. The plan is to do a kit by kit analysis to determine the correct value and make the necessary changes.

Best regards,

Jon Manning
