

Bartlebaugh's Enchanted Forest .

Bartlebaugh used to be a big farm in the Hwy 58 area, down Champion Road a bit. The locals in these parts tell of a popular swimming hole at Bartlebaugh, down a dirt road behind the church. The dirt road is now paved and called Lamon Lane which becomes Howard Adair Rd. later. The Enchanted Forest of Bartlebaugh is now a part of Booker T. Washington State Park. Please be sure to check the link to the park's website: <http://www.state.tn.us/environment/parks/bookert/index.html> for current info on park rules. Park closes at sunset, with a $3 access fee "per vehicle", paid at the park's office. To find the Enchanted Forest of Bartlebaugh you will need to find the bike trail first. You can enter either from inside Booker T. State Park (but I haven't a clue where from inside), or from Lamon Road, which is the first left off Champion Rd., past the state park. The Lamon Rd. trail entrance is used by most bikers, who park at the church. The trail entrance from Lamon Road can be found at N 35° 07.234', W 85° 10.010' on the left side of the road. After you have found the trail from Lamon Rd., proceed into the Enchanted Forest and take the 2nd left fork in the trail. You will cross the "moat" and proceed to The Pointe. The trail will then turn to the south and follow the edge of the Tennessee River. You will come upon the Tree of White Lichens, and then you will pass through the Great Towers of Ivy. Continue on the trail until you walk through the Second of the Two Tree Arches. The cache will be very close after you pass through the Second Arch. Not sure of the Two Tree Arches as two storms have come thru recently and downed many trees in the area.
