Each subscriber, and any other interested researcher, is encouraged to:

1. Submit queries on your Woodworth lines.

A Word from the Historian's Corner

Just a couple of reminders: If you are able to respond to a person who places a query in the Woodworth Family Newsletter, please send a copy of that response to me also so that my records can be kept up-to-date. Secondly, there is no extra charge to a subscriber in submitting data to the newsletter (queries, family news, biographies, xeroxed pictures of ancestors, etc.) This is a free service which I hope you will avail yourselves of in the future. At present, due to the quantity of material to be placed in the newsletter, items submitted may not always be published immediately, but will be included as soon as possible.

To date only two people have had trouble in regards to their newsletters arriving in poor condition. Over 500 newsletters have gone through the mails to date so the ratio is relatively low, therefore, not necessitating envelopes at this time. I will re-evaluate the situation in Sept., 1985, the first anniversary of the newsletter. Please continue to keep me informed.

Many positive comments were received regarding the last newsletter which devoted space to Samuel Woodworth, the Poet. This issue devotes a good deal of space to Grace Woodworth, the Photographer. You might call the article on Grace as "giving equal time to the womens' movement," but I would prefer to think in terms of Grace having earned her right to space in this newsletter on her own merits. She must have been a grand lady and well ahead of her time. Due to lack of space, at least two newsletters, and possibly three, will be needed for the material on Grace Woodworth.

Keep the family news, queries and letters coming. Also Woodworth addresses from local telephone directories are appreciated. And, many thanks to those of you who have taken the time to send these addresses on to me.

Warmest regards,

Jean

In Barbara Cruchon's letter to me of 25 Feb 1985 she goes on to say:

".....I've been doing some research among other early Woodward/Woodworth immigrants and their families--there were a surprising number of them! As to any relationship between Woodwards and Woodworths, I personally believe this is a matter of family relationship, and that the two names are identical. Remember, many of our early ancestors could not write--their names as we find them written down, were often written by some clerk, who may or may not have been much of a speller, and who wrote what he heard, or thought he heard. Spelling was an uncertain thing in the early days too (something that's hard to keep in mind, for those of us who really had to learn to spell in school!).

English names ending in "rd" were often found also ending with "rth"--such as William Bradford of Plymouth Colony fame. Early records of his family in England often give "Bradfurth," and his signature, while apparently "Bradford" alright, also looks a great deal like "Bradforth" because of the way he wrote his letters. So I really don't believe that Woodward and Woodworth are two distinct names--I expect most of us confine our research to "Woodworth" just to preserve our sanity. And of course, by this time, the families have all settled on their own particular surname spelling. Many of those early New England Woodward families were sometimes called Woodworth in early records--so it works both ways!"

FAMILY NEWS

DIANE MARTIN (WJ-123 156 23-i) wishes to inform us of the death of her father, GEORGE CARTER WOODWORTH, Jr., son of George Carter and Nellie May (Lewis) Woodworth, b. 13 September 1920, Chicago, IL and d. 17 Nov 1984, White River Junction, VT of lung cancer. He was raised in New Rochelle, NY.

On 18 Aug 1941, George married BARBARA ANN GARGES of New Rochelle, NY, and they became the parents of DIANE LEWIS, GEORGE CARTER III and LYNN GARGES.

Their grandchildren are: Kenneth Lewis and Scott Daniel, sons of Diane and Louis Daniel Martin; Katharina Erika, George Carter IV and Stephen Paul, children of George and Erika (Giersburg) Woodworth III. A sixth grandchild is due in March, 1985, and will be the first child for Lynn and Karl Biemuller.

George retired from the shipping business in 1968, picked up on his daughter Diane's genealogy habit and became invaluable as he had the freedom to travel. He went to many local sources and found alot of unpublished information. Diane is now in the process of consolidating both their files.

MARSHA HOFFMAN RISING (WJ-114 1.10) will be speaking at the National Genealogical Society Meeting in Salt Lake City this summer and would love to meet any other "cousins" who might be attending. For further information, she may be contacted at 6058 Primrose Lane, Springfield, MO 65804.

MRS. MARTIN J. FITCH (WB-323 242 1-iv) writes to tell us that her brother ELBERT WOODWORTH's daughter JEAN PRECTEL had a baby boy on 10 February 1985, named JOSHUA DALE.

JENNETTE (SMITH) (CAMP) WOODWORTH, widow of William C. Woodworth (WB-323 241) will celebrate her 85th birthday on 21 April 1985. Jennette makes her home with her daughter, JEANETTE and son-in-law JAMES BEHAN.

SCOTT JAMES BEHAN (WB-323 241-i-iii) placed 4th in his weight class in the State of Connecticut Class L Wrestling Tournament in March, 1985. At the High School wrestling dinner he received a trophy for the most valuable Freshman wrestler and a trophy for "scholarship" wrestler having remained on high honors scholastically with a 93 average during the entire wrestling season which covered two marking periods.

Art Center Announces Publication

Schweinfurth Art Center has announced the release of its fifth major publication, a 60 page illustrated monograph and exhibition catalogue concerning the life and career of turn-of-the-century photographer Grace Woodworth of Seneca Falls.

The publication includes 26 duotoned images from Woodworth's repertoire, reproduced from glass plate negatives and original photographs in the collection of the Seneca Falls Historical Society. The catalogue also includes text by Mary Stanley, social historian, S.U., and Anthony Bannon, photo historian, Buffalo investigating Grace Woodworth's life and career choices, and the times and region which shaped and influenced those choices.

Catalogue and exhibition research were funded by a grant from the New York Council for the Humanities and catalogue printing was supported by the New York State Council on the Arts and Polaroid Foundation.

The project was conceived and produced by Heather Tunis, director of the Schweinfurth Art Center, who also acquired the funding. Printing of the publication "Grace Woodworth: Outside the Common Lines" was done by Finger Lakes Press of Auburn.

Grace Woodworth was born in Seneca Falls in 1872 and opened her first professional photography studio in Union Springs about 1897 and moved to Rochester in 1900.

In 1908 she returned to Seneca Falls and spent the rest of her life there. She ran her studio on Fall St. until the early 1930s. She was especially known as an excellent portrait photographer, though few examples of individual portraits survive.

The exhibition and catalog images have been selected from the Grace Woodworth Collection at the Seneca Falls Historical Society. The exhibition was first at Schweinfurth Art Center, and will subsequently travel to the Museums at Hartwick College in Oneonta, the New York State Museum in Albany and two additional sites. The publication is available through Schweinfurth Art Center, 205 Genesee St., Auburn, 13021; Telephone (315) 255-1553.

Grace Baffles Historians

By CAROL RITTER

SENECA FALLS—This community is known as the birthplace of women's rights—it was the site of the 1848 Women's Rights Convention organized by Elizabeth Cady Stanton and several other widely-known suffragettes—but official records don't offer much information about one of the earliest professional women who lived and worked here.

Miss Grace Woodworth was a working professional photographer in Seneca Falls for decades shortly after the turn of the century, and her cameras and personal effects occupy a whole room at the Historical Society Museum on Cayuga St.

But the ledgers, business receipts and advertising materials in that room say little about the woman behind the name.

Miss Woodworth died a few years ago, some years after she had retired, but the public library and the historical society don't have her obituary on file.

The papers that are available in her room at the museum, however, provide a few glimpses into the life and work of the lady described by a friend as "very independent."

A Rochester Democrat and Chronicle clipping dated April 15, 1905, is headlined "A Woman Who Photographs" with the sub-head "Pleasing Portraits of Men, Women & Children."

The clipping reads "Miss Grace A. Woodworth is one of Rochester's most successful photographers, her talents in portraiture having built up a large patronage for her studio in all branches of photographic work. She has, however, been particularly successful with children, the little ones regarding a visit to her studio as a real treat, with the result that the portraits are natural and pleasing . . . Miss Susan B. Anthony recently sat to Miss Woodworth for her portrait on the occasion of her 85th birthday . . . Miss Woodworth is particularly apt in the portraiture of women's costumes, her knowledge of women's wishes being greatly appreciated, and Easter time usually brings a large number of ladies to her to be photographed in the new gowns of the season."

Shirley Patterson, director of the Seneca Falls Museum, said her records show that Miss Woodworth worked in Rochester for eight years, with a studio at 30 East Main St. Or November 3, 1911, she opened a studio on Fall St. here and she worked here until the time of her retirement.

But at some point along the way she also worked in Oswego, according to Clarence Bullock, a retired local photographer who knew her.

"Her father had a dry goods store here," he recalls. "I remember Grace Woodworth as being short, a bit heavy, very independent."

The bulky cherry-and-brass portrait camera used in Miss Woodworth's studio work is a far cry from today's streamlined models. The contrivance stands nearly five feet tall and occupies roughly the floor area of a large refrigerator.

In the Woodworth photography room at the museum here, Miss Woodworth's big camera stands in the center of the room facing an ornate Victorian chair in which her clients were seated for their portraits. The chair is posed in front of a 10-foot-square hand-painted canvas backdrop, with a subdued pastoral scene providing the setting for her "pleasing portraits of men, women and children."

Among the personal effects gathered in and around a chest of drawers in the room are several ledgers listing small purchases and business transactions.

"See, she even kept track of her magazine subscriptions," Mrs. Patterson said, pointing out the neat, bold script of the late photographer in one of the ledgers.

Miss Woodworth and a spinster sister lived for years in a frame house on Johnson St. Both are dead now, and their friends are dwindling too.

The lack of more detailed records pertaining to their lives and the lives of their contemporaries was be-moaned by Mrs. Ethel Bishop, public librarian.

"That period, from 1900 to 1924, is one we don't have in many of our records in Seneca Falls," she said. "It would be too bad to lose the knowledge and details we need to keep it alive in our history. If somebody doesn't do something pretty soon that period in this community's history is going to be lost."

"... and if you were restless ..."

Grace Woodworth was born and raised in Seneca Falls, New York, a small industrial town nestled between the heads of Cayuga and Seneca Lakes. Woodworth's maturation into an independent person may have been fostered by three influences in her life: her strong family, the time period in which she lived, and the unique role her hometown had in the history of women's suffrage.

The Woodworth family was made up of parents Josiah Crane and Edna A. Miller Woodworth and their children Elmer, Jennie, Grace, and Edith. Josiah Woodworth was a self-made man, a descendent of a revolutionary patriot and of an old colonial family. In business he suffered a series of losses and reversals. His dry goods business, begun in the 1840's with one of his six brothers, dissolved in 1851 when his brother became ill. The business picked up again and continued with a new partner named Henry T. Seymour until 1880.¹ Woodworth's 1906 obituary describes Woodworth as losing the business in 1880, and thereafter working as a travelling agent for two companies. His expense book, now in the archives of the Seneca Falls Historical Society, suggests in precise detail the degree of his honesty while working for others.² His obituary praises his "sterling character," and he is described by a family member as "... a wonderful man, patient, outgoing."³

Grace Woodworth was only eight years old when her father took to the road and eighteen years old when he retired in 1890. She did not seem to view her father as a failure; instead, she seemed to witness a man whose willingness to work for others suggested a flexibility and adaptability.

Her mother, Edna, the second of two sisters whom Josiah married, the first having died, was described by a family member as "a lady," meaning that "she didn't do any work, had servants, and never raised her voice." The impression which remained with this relative was that Edna never quite approved of her daughter's work, wishing instead that the girl had grown into the role of a lady.⁴

For much of Grace Woodworth's childhood, the family led a comfortable middle class life, and her childhood memories are fond ones. In a 1963 interview, Woodworth described herself as having been an artistic child. Her memories of childhood were vivid, concrete, and sensory, and she spoke of the feelings, sounds, and smells of those years. She mentioned that she loved to paint as a child, which led, in consequence, to the fact that photography came naturally to her.⁵ Scattered traces of her childhood remain, revealing a romantic child, with a love of adventure, yet a timid nature: an elementary school composition, a notebook describing dance steps, a well-used library card.⁶

While Woodworth's artistic nature, evident in childhood, had a strong influence on her choice of a career, demographics may have had a similar effect on her choice to support herself. Of the women in her 1890 Mynderse Academy graduating class, very few married, and may have supported themselves by default.⁷

In the Seneca Falls of 1890, the ideal for a woman was to marry, and maintain a middle class lifestyle, running a large household, raising children, directing servants, and attending teas, club meetings, and charitable projects. Her role was that of a "lady."⁸

Woodworth's choice to remain single may have had as much to do with demographics as it had with choice. In 1904, fourteen years after her high school graduation, only three of her thirteen female classmates were married. The nine surviving women appeared to have taken advantage of the options which were starting to open up to middle class women. Over half of them were working in publically recognized occupations outside the home in 1904: two were teachers, one a nun, one a stenographer, one a business manager, and Woodworth, who was described as an artist.⁹

Prior to this time, there were few options open to single middle class women, beyond the role of an "unmarried lady," usually integrated into their families as "maiden aunts."¹⁷ That middle class women were sculpting unique lives beyond the role of the lady by the end of the 19th century may have resulted from both necessity and opportunity. Woodworth, like her female contemporaries, may have been guided by both necessity and opportunity. However, it must be said that she exercised choice in pursuing a profession she enjoyed, and one which clearly reflected her talents.

A third major influence in Woodworth's early life may have been a function of an historical event in the life of Seneca Falls, her hometown. The town was the site of the historic first Woman's Rights Convention, held in 1848, organized by resident Elizabeth Cady Stanton. Although the impact of the nascent women's rights movement on Woodworth's contemporaries is difficult to verify, it is tempting to hypothesize that Woodworth was influenced by the idea of equality for women.

In the 1970's, Seneca Falls began to appear in high school textbooks and scholarly works as the site of an history-making event: the Woman's Rights Convention of 1848. That historic event insured that the town would never be obscure, but Seneca Falls in the past seemed not to have fully absorbed the event's significance.

It is clear from papers published by the Seneca Falls Historical Society after it became incorporated in 1904, that the Woman's Rights Convention was not a major focus for those who controlled the range of what was of historical interest in Seneca Falls.¹⁸ The Historical Society published accounts of the history of medicine in Seneca Falls, of druggists, dry goods stores, milliners, insurance agents, and the lives and times of the town's founders, early capitalists, and gentlemen farmers. The proceedings of the 1908 celebration of the 60th Anniversary of the Woman's Rights Convention, published by the Historical Society, seems to have been an opportunity for the society to act as secretary for a community-wide celebration rather than as an interpreter of an historically significant event.¹⁹

Indeed, the Woman's rights Convention of 1848, even at the time, was an event of considerable ambivalence in Seneca Falls. Not all the citizens of the village were charmed by Mrs. Stanton and her ideas. One resident still remembered the cherished story of her grandmother's refusal to ride in a carriage with Mrs. Stanton—an attitude not surprising in light of the nationwide ridicule of those activists who signed a Declaration of Sentiments so contrary to "business-as-usual between the sexes." Even after Mrs. Stanton became famous and respectable, a Seneca Falls music teacher describing Stanton's triumphant return to Seneca Falls after the Civil War, in a paper on Stanton commented that many people who were delighted with the national fame of their former neighbor nonetheless remained in disagreement with Stanton's views regarding women's rights.²⁰

Seneca Falls was blessed and burdened with the women's rights controversy from its earliest days. National history began to coalesce around Seneca Falls's founding mothers and their ideas, rather than around its founding fathers and their feats. For those who lived in Seneca Falls, whose fathers were the "enterprising men of capital" of local myth, and whose mothers were the upper middle class creators of village "culture," national interest in Seneca Falls as the birthplace of the women's rights movement may have appeared to overlook the community's real achievements.

By the late 19th century, when Grace Woodworth was born, the women's rights movement was almost an abstraction in Seneca Falls. The movement's implications were reduced by many to whether or not Elizabeth Cady Stanton was really a good neighbor and whether or not Amelia Bloomer should take credit for the costume which bore her name. The original purpose of Bloomer's message of social reform faded: it was linked only to temperance.²¹ While feminists on the national scene were addressing a pantheon of concerns, residents of Seneca Falls were redefining those issues to fit a small town context.²²

It is not surprising, given Seneca Falls's formal and somewhat conservative understanding of the women's rights movement, that Grace Woodworth was formally linked to feminist efforts only by virtue of her membership in the local temperance club, and by the fact that her uncle signed the Declaration of Sentiments.²³ Available evidence appears to indicate Woodworth had no direct relationship to the women's rights movement beyond her relationship during the early 1900s with the suffrage leader Susan B. Anthony, discussed later in this text.

Indeed, if Woodworth's view of the women's rights movement mirrored those of her contemporaries, then the impact of the movement on her was modest. In directed interviews with now elderly members of Woodworth's generation, residents remember the celebrations not the issues.²⁴ They particularly remember the 1925 commemoration of the Woman's Rights Convention: a pageant on The Flats, the speeches, the ice cream riot. The memories are idiosyncratic and personal and the event is remembered as a chance for the town to shine, to entertain national figures like Alice Paul and Clare Booth Luce, to gossip about the clothing of out-of-town guests and to work together on a project. The charge to wisely use the newly-won vote for women was lost in the fun.²⁵

A close relative described Woodworth as an "individualist," not a feminist nurtured and sustained by the memories of 1848. The evidence seems to support this claim. If the part Seneca Falls played in the history of women's rights had an influence on Woodworth's initial decision to venture "outside the common lines," then that influence was intangible and difficult to establish.
